Program Educational Objectives

The Master’s Program in Private Law with Thesis aims to provide students with advanced theoretical knowledge in the core disciplines of private law, to enable them to examine legal issues through scientific research methods, and to help them develop a level of specialization sufficient for academic work. The program seeks to offer in-depth knowledge in the principal fields of private law, including Civil Law, Labour and Social Security Law, Private International Law, Commercial Law, and Civil Procedure and Enforcement-Bankruptcy Law. One of the main objectives of the program is to ensure that students are able to comprehend both classical and contemporary debates in private law, improve their skills in interpreting and evaluating legal norms, and approach legal problems with an analytical, critical, and solution-oriented perspective. In this context, the program aims not only to provide students with knowledge of legislation, but also to enable them to make multidimensional assessments by taking into account judicial decisions, doctrinal views, and comparative legal data. As a thesis-based program, one of its primary goals is also to equip students with the ability to conduct independent research, access scientific resources, carry out studies in accordance with the rules of academic writing, and prepare an original thesis. The program aims to contribute to the training of legal professionals who are committed to the principles of academic ethics, capable of systematic thinking, able to formulate research questions, and able to express their findings in accordance with academic standards. In addition, the program seeks to strengthen the advanced legal analysis, interpretation, and evaluation skills that graduates will need both in academic settings and in professional fields such as the judiciary, public institutions, and other areas of legal practice. Accordingly, it is envisaged that students will be trained as competent individuals who can relate the theoretical foundation of private law to practice, follow national and international developments, and make scholarly contributions to the field of private law.
